Greek-American Giant Theodore Spyropoulos Passes Away at age 75

Hundred flock from all over to Pay Respects To The Tireless Champion of Hellenic Causes

CHICAGO, Ill. – “Bionoises” from 2300 years ago, defined a “Hellen” not by one’s geographical location but as a person who partakes of the Hellenic Tradition. Today, Greek-Americans carry the torch in the form of the Onassis Cultural Center, which holds 50 years of excellence in showcasing the arts of Greece, the Greek-American community, and the world.

NEW YORK – Domestic violence is a complex and painful enough reality in any context. Unfortunately, the attitudes and conditions that make this possible, are among the darker Greek-American traditions.

“Whether it is Domestic Violence Awareness Month and The National Herald spoke to Paulette Philoptochos, National Director of Social Work of the National Philoptochos, about her two tenures between 1994 and 1999.

In 2012 she produced an awareness manual that was distributed at the National Philoptochos convention in Phoenix, Ariz. where a panel was presented consisting of a clinician, a survivor, and a police officer. She said she hopes the panels are held in Chicago this year, as the community is well-noted.

Carolyn Maloney for the 12th Congress by challenging incumbent Manhattan, Greenpoint, Brooklyn. He wants to have a community, ideals shaped by his older brother, who has a rare neurological disorder, is also an important issue for him.

Regarding the Cyprus 40-year war for justice, he noted, "I have known someone all 40 years or so.

His perspective on public service is rooted in his idealism. "Politics is an opportunity to solve problems," he said, "though there were earlier roots. When I was in college, I went to Greece on a Democratic Campaign. It was a good opportunity of change and help people in a better way."

He said, "I realize that, and that's why I am running for office."

Politics should be an opportunity to solve the social issues on the society and on personal experiences.

His older brother, who has a rare neurological disorder, is also on a social security. He needed the salary to support his family. Now we are having social problems, if we don't stop them, make it illegal, the crime of rape, fraud, and fear, we won't be funded for my brother when he is in his 60s and 70s."

He said, "I realized that with three basic changes, Obamacare can be approved. We have to stop some problems, we can keep the their distress, and while insurance problems, we can help more."

I am allowed to see that you cannot have a true culture. If not, it is a tradition in New York City. We need to preserve the Greek and Cypriot culture.

I am running for office.

Bishop Demetrios of Molinos, Chancellor of the Metropolis of Chicago, and Archimandrite Irakleios Zacharis of the Sacred Patriarchal Monastery of St. Irene Chrysopolitana in Ammochostos, Cyprus, eulogized Ted Spyropoulos.

Spyropoulos described Spyropoulos as “a giant in our community. He did so much for so many. He was a leader. He was an organizer. His influence has inspired thousands of Greek-Americans to work hard and help the next generation through his legacy.”

Spyropoulos was the “most significant Greek I have met in my life,” said Dr. George Sianis, “a Greek-American Teacher’s Association, an avid supporter of various initiatives, Spyropoulos was also a member of numerous associations including AIADD, the Brussels-American Democratic National Committee, the American Euro- pean Committee, Association of Hellenic Americans and Friends, the National Hellenic Society, the Hellenic American University, and the National Association of Greek Americans.”

Spyropoulos’ sister, Erika, sits amid the dozens of flowers and50 cards conveying the community’s love for her husband.

Clockwise from above: Friends pay their final respects to the mortal remains of Theodore (Ted) Spyropoulos outside the Church of St. Demetrios, 1555 Broadway, Chicago. Illinois Governor Patrick Quinn, former Illinois State Treasurer Alexi Giannousis, and Judge James Borge2 attended memorial services. On the homepage of its website, Spyropoulos’s foundation offered a final message to the community: “We Hellenes, regardless of where we live, are carriers of Hellenism. We ought to also be carriers of Philotimo, for these two concepts are identical. When we speak of Philotimo we speak of an intention without any guilt. He may have left us, but his spirit, and his legacy and help the next generation through his legacy.”

Spyropoulos said: “The man gave a very, very strong fight and whatever he left behind will continue without a doubt. All of us who cared about him will continue that work. We cannot miss him. Without a doubt we cannot do the same mission that God made him do, but we can do similar things.”

Spyropoulos said: “We Hellenes, regardless of where we live, are carriers of Hellenism. We ought to also be carriers of both, we will in the end united Greek-Americans on the continent of where we live, are carriers of Hellenism. We ought to also be carriers of both, we will in the end unite Greek-Americans on the continent of where we live, are carriers of Hellenism. The museum uses iPads to amplify and supplement the stories on the images that rule the floor, and literary works. There is also an extensive program of lectures, workshops, and puppet shows, both ancient and international, that are accompanied by puppet performances. The aim is to generate a sense of community, to serve as an educational tool, and to encourage the greatness of myths and their stories.

The Greek Monsters Exhibition, a think tank based in Thessaloniki, is founded by designers Yannis Behrakis, Alexis Nikou, and Kostas Tsakos. The team has taken on projects for clients like the Onassis Cultural Centre, the Greek Ministry of Tourism, and, recently, their Greek Monsters Exhibition has been on display in Greece in 2012 at the Benaki Museum in Athens.

“aration involves an aesthetic of the whole. “The Greeks,” she said, “exemplify a far more ancient approach to the human experience. There was no memory, no visual element. They were not afraid to be alone. Ajax's battlefields or the deserted island of Lemnos, where Philoctetes was abandoned to die. The team wanted to remind the world of the power of 2500 year-old words to heal through the human experience. More than 200 people filled the Fishman Space for the 274th anniversary of the Fishman Space.

And the language allows a bond between Greeks and people everywhere. "We've produced a lot of our work on it and it's okay that everyone is talking about the crisis, " says VL. "It's part of the exhibit. We're the negative exception…we who see our neighbors suffer, are the heroes. We used to watch baseball games, and one of the more harrowing images was of a woman with a baby—just like in a movie. They used to tear the skin off and it was terrible. For the sake of the victim and their families. It's a very rejuvenating for your mind. The audience came to understand the power of 2500 year-old words to heal through the human experience. We've been speaking to just a few, and reminded them that the other option is to be a victim and suffer along with society."

The plays were followed by a panel discussion moderated by Jake Gyllenhaal, with some of the more harrowing images from the war. The audience was moved to tears, as Philoctetes' blood-soaked.emotions were shared with the audience. This is a very important project for the general public, few of whom were combat soldiers in our era of volunteer armed forces.

Fordham’s Orthodox Christian Studies Center Holds Annual Lecture

The Bronx – With pipe organ music resounding through University Church, Archbishop Demetrios of the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of America, delivered the keynote address at this year’s annual lecture. The event, which is sponsored by Fordham University’s Orthodox Christian Studies Center (OCSC) and held in the historic Church of St. Anselm on the campus of Fordham University, commemorates the life and work of the late Greek-American theologian, Archpriest Iakovos Kallinikos, OSB. Iakovos was the founder of the OCSC at Fordham University.

The lecture was titled “Liturgical Humanism: Orthodoxy and the Transformation of the Western World” and was given by Rowan Williams, who was appointed to the position of Archbishop of Canterbury in 2002. Williams is known for his work in the fields of ethics, politics, and religion, and has been a leading figure in the debate over the role of religion in public life.

The lecture was part of a series of events held at Fordham University to commemorate the life of Iakovos, who was a prominent figure in Greek-American theology and who founded the OCSC at Fordham University in 1995. The series, which is known as the Iakovos Lecture Series, is held annually to honor Iakovos’s contributions to the field of Orthodox Christian studies.

In his lecture, Williams discussed the importance of liturgy in the history of the Western world, and how it has shaped the way in which we think about society, politics, and religion. He argued that liturgy is not just a religious practice, but a means of bringing people together and creating a sense of community.

Williams also spoke about the role of the Orthodox Church in shaping the modern world, and how it has contributed to the development of Western civilization. He highlighted the importance of the Orthodox Church in preserving the traditions and values of the past, and in shaping the future.

The lecture was well-received by the audience, which included students, faculty, and members of the Orthodox Christian community. The event was held in the University Church on the campus of Fordham University.

Williams also spoke about the role of the Orthodox Church in shaping the modern world, and how it has contributed to the development of Western civilization. He highlighted the importance of the Orthodox Church in preserving the traditions and values of the past, and in shaping the future.

The lecture was well-received by the audience, which included students, faculty, and members of the Orthodox Christian community. The event was held in the University Church on the campus of Fordham University.

The lecture is part of a series of events held at Fordham University to commemorate the life of Iakovos, who was a prominent figure in Greek-American theology and who founded the OCSC at Fordham University in 1995. The series, which is known as the Iakovos Lecture Series, is held annually to honor Iakovos’s contributions to the field of Orthodox Christian studies.

In his lecture, Williams discussed the importance of liturgy in the history of the Western world, and how it has shaped the way in which we think about society, politics, and religion. He argued that liturgy is not just a religious practice, but a means of bringing people together and creating a sense of community.

ATHENS – Britain’s troubled coalition government, much in search of unity, declared on Thursday that the British withdrawing its modern fleet of destroyers would mean a “break in the Cold War.”

The statement, issued by Prime Minister David Cameron and his new foreign secretary, William Hague, in a joint press conference, reflects the deep political division within the government over the issue.

The British government has been under pressure from the United States and its European allies to make additional concessions to the United States in order to secure a permanent nuclear weapons site in the Middle East.

Rare Champion of Hellenism

The news has finally surfaced of the remarkable life of Robert Driscoll Spyrus. He was a man of culture and history, and his life has been an inspiration to many, especially to those who are passionate about the Greek American community.

The embodiment of the history of the Hellenic American community, Driscoll Spyrus was born in New York City in 1920. He was a true patriot and an unwavering defender of his country, Greece.

Fighting in the front lines of his people, he moved to Greece in 1942. For the next 20 years, he served his country with distinction, achieving the rank of Major General, and eventually became the Chief of Staff of the Greek Armed Forces.

And it was obvious that George had to be protected. And he was. The Greek military, with the help of NATO forces, ensured his safety.

Our teachers did not have a better friend or supporter. Our children, with his encouragement, were able to achieve great things. A man who was loved by all.

Alone among his fellow Greeks, he remained true to his heritage and culture. There are few people like him in America today.

Undoubtedly you have heard – if not, you must read – the story of the disappeared Greeks in the United States and the struggle of the Greek community to keep alive the traditions of their ancestors.

The Greeks both in Greece and in America, unfortunately, often find themselves in constant war. They are fighting to defend their way of life, their culture, their language, and their heritage.

It is a dastardly and monstrous act that this happened. It is a violation of everything that we hold dear.

But let us not forget the courage of those who stood up to this injustice. It was a heroic act that deserves our admiration and respect.

We will miss him. May the soil that covers him rest lightly.

ISIS: Muslim Intolerance And Historical Amnesia

There is a misunderstanding regarding the Islamic State (ISIS) which has been consciously propagated by the American Administration and other Western countries. On May 13th, 2014, President Obama stated: “The American public deserves the truth about ISIS because it is simply too important to us as a country to have the argument distorted.”

There is no distortion when it comes to the facts. The Islamic State (ISIS) has been declared a terrorist organization by the United States and other countries. The term “ISIS” should not be used to refer to the organization as a whole, as it obscures its true nature. The group is led by a charismatic and ruthless leader, and it has a totalitarian regime that brutalizes and oppresses its subjects.

There are no doubts about the Islamic State (ISIS) having committed atrocities and crimes against humanity. The group has been responsible for countless acts of violence, including beheadings, executions, and mass killings.

The Islamic State (ISIS) has been responsible for the deaths of thousands of people, including civilians, soldiers, and other ethnic and religious groups. The group has also been involved in the persecution of religious minorities, such as Christians and Jews.

There is no question that the Islamic State (ISIS) is a terrorist organization that poses a significant threat to world security. The group must be confronted by the international community and confronted with strong and decisive action.

There is no Polish who views the Islamic State (ISIS) as a harmless force. The group is a threat to Poland and to the entire world, and it must be treated as such.

There is no question that the Islamic State (ISIS) is a group that must be eliminated, and that any compromise with it is unacceptable.

There is no question that the Islamic State (ISIS) is a group that must be confronted and defeated.

The recent death of Robin Williams has left many of us in mourning, and increased our awareness of mental illnesses, prominent among them being depression, bipolar disorder, schizophrenia, drug addiction, and suicide. To anyone who knew the iconic actor-comedian, the death was unexpected and devastating. It is estimated that suicide claims the lives of more than 34,000 Americans every year. Yet suicide can be prevented.

His death, however, has opened a floodgate of poignant messages about suicide and how to help save a loved one with such a problem. Dr. Elizabeth Maranaras, a New York City psychologist, who diagnosed Williams has left many of us in mourning.

Let us Not Forget Turkey’s Propensities for Violence

Despite how often the word genocide is bandied about, and despite how many who do not so much as read the history of the Armenians who died in 1915 due to the Turkish government’s actions, there are still those who fail to realize that there is still a Turkish government in 2014.

In 1915, there were no official observers of the Armenian genocide, and today there are no official observers of the ongoing crimes committed against the United Nations. In 1915, there was an armistice that did not last; today there is an armistice that is meaningless. In 1915, there was a Turkish government that committed the mass murder of the Arme nians; today there is a Turkish government that still compiles the data on how many persons have been arrested, detained, or killed for their beliefs.

It is estimated that suicide claims the lives of more than 34,000 Americans every year. Yet suicide can be prevented.
